(CNN) House Republicans will have to return the first month's worth of government funds to pay for the border wall after the Supreme Court blocked the President's emergency declaration, as GOP lawmakers prepared to take action in a closed-door meeting Tuesday. It is not clear how many days worth of funds can be reclaimed, though GOP aides told CNN they will need to come back with more than a month's worth of government funding. GOP lawmakers will also have to decide what to do about funding other agencies, like the Department of Health and Human Services, where parts of the Trump administration's immigration agenda are being implemented, several GOP aides told CNN. The Supreme Court's ruling allows the money for the wall to be returned. The House will also have to come back with a new spending plan to start the next fiscal year on October 1, and congressional leaders from both parties -- as well as President Trump -- have been negotiating on a new funding package for agencies. When those talks begin, the amount that House Republicans will reclaim from the money set aside for border security is likely to be a major sticking point, as many have indicated they want to use it for other purposes. Surgical site infections (SSI) are an important cause of morbidity and mortality in surgical patients. We performed a retrospective analysis of medical records and identified 1359 procedures in patients who had SSI. The SSI incidence was 4.3%, and more than 90% of the infections occurred within 30 days. The major focus of infection was a deep site (i.e. abdominal wall or pelvis), and the predominant organism was Staphylococcus aureus. SSIs occurred frequently after an intermediate or complex surgical procedure. Among intermediate procedures, gastrointestinal operations were associated with the highest incidence of SSI. For complex procedures, laparoscopic cholecystectomy had the highest rate
