(Cloud Native) Microsoft Azure Container Service for Kubernetes is a hybrid cloud solution for deploying Kubernetes containers in Microsoft Azure. The Kubernetes node type used is based on the Azure Kubernetes Service and the Kubernetes worker pools are virtual machines in Microsoft Azure. Microsoft Azure Kubernetes Service is a managed Kubernetes service in Microsoft Azure providing high availability and resilience. The service can deploy Kubernetes clusters using existing cloud infrastructure. Azure Kubernetes Service allows you to deploy a production-grade Kubernetes cluster in your Azure subscription. Containers Container-based microservices are a way of deploying software applications and allowing multiple teams to interact with the code by consuming each other's services through defined interfaces. Containers are lightweight and self-contained, but allow the sharing of a single set of dependencies and configuration. Docker is a platform used to create and run containers. Docker containers may run in a server on the user's laptop, within a server in a datacenter, or within a container hosting platform such as Amazon Web Services. A container may be a basic OS component, such as Linux, or it may be a complete application, such as a database server or game engine. Docker containers are written in a small language called Dockerfile. Go Networking Network Functions Virtualization (NFV) is a technology where traditional hardware-based networking switches and routers are virtualized and delivered as a service. NFV allows a network service provider to offer network service deployments without having to purchase and manage networking equipment. It uses standard networking features in a virtualized environment, based on commodity hardware, such as a server, and software, such as Linux.
