A: You can use a utility such as AutoCAD Runtime Validation (to determine the validity of the product. Q: How to reduce amount of summation in a for loop? I'm finding the percentage of pixels in an image that are different than its mean and background values. I'm using python.

from skimage import io, measure, color, imread raw = open('raw')
data = np.loadtxt(raw, delimiter=',') # Compute number of pixels n = len(data) # Compute mean image = color.rgb2gray(data)
measure.mean_image(image)
mean = mean # Compute background raw = open('dontreadraw', 'r') filedata = raw.readlines() # number of pixels in the file ncount = len(filedata) # Replace blank spaces with empty strings filedata = [filedata.replace(' ', ", 1).replace(' ', ", 1).replace('\t', ", 1) for line in filedata] image = color.rgb2gray(data)
mean = mean # Measure cols and rows coords = measure.shape(image) cols, rows = coords #Determine individual pixel's background background = [np.mean(r) for r in image] counts = [np.sum(r!= background) for r in image]
for r in range(rows):
    for c in range(cols):
        percentage = float(counts[c] / ncount)
        print str(percentage)

I was hoping to save some time using a for loop to obtain the percentage of pixels in an image that are not equal to the background. I can do that with two for loops, but I'm trying to learn to use for loops more efficiently. I thought this might work.

for r in range(rows):
    for c in range(cols):
        for x in range(len
