UK Police are investigating claims that a stabbing was carried out on a student at the University of Cambridge - and two other attacks. The male victim suffered a knife wound to the abdomen and was taken to hospital. Police say the victim has now been discharged. Cambridge University has confirmed the incident is being investigated as an alleged hate crime. The incident occurred at around 02:00 BST (07:00 local time) and the victim was taken to hospital but has now been discharged. The police are investigating whether it is a hate crime, with the victim a black man. Cambridge University Police Superintendent Rob Johnson told local media: "We are currently investigating an alleged hate crime. The incident happened at about 2:00 on a Friday morning in a building in the centre of the city." "We are looking at it very carefully, but we don't have a huge amount to go on at this stage." The force said the suspects fled the scene, in the city's historic cobbled streets, wearing dark-coloured clothing. One woman, who saw the victim bleeding, said: "I saw a man being stabbed and the attackers walking away, in the direction of Corn Exchange Street. "We tried to stop the man being stabbed, but we
