In the automotive industry, it is known to provide a hydraulic power steering system which is an add-on steering system to an automotive vehicle, which provides improved steering control compared to conventional steering systems. The hydraulic power steering system provides an enhanced steering force at a steering ratio between the speed and angular displacement of the steering wheel, which may be higher and the force required by the operator may be lower than a conventional automotive vehicle steering system. The hydraulic power steering system includes a steering control valve connected to a master cylinder. The steering control valve is typically constructed of a solenoid operated valve and a valve body containing a spring means. The valve body containing the spring means is actuated by an electromagnet in response to an electrical input signal provided by a control module. The valve body is biased in a first direction by the spring means and is displaceable in a second direction by the electromagnet to control the flow of fluid through the steering valve. Thus, a modulated pressure is developed in the master cylinder in response to the electrical input signal. The pressure developed in the master cylinder is applied to a valve element in the steering control valve to control the flow of fluid through the steering valve. The steering control valve is connected between a fluid power line and a mechanical connection to the steering gear of the vehicle. The fluid power line is typically connected to a reservoir of pressurized fluid. The reservoir may be a hydraulic reservoir which may be charged with pressurized fluid or the reservoir may be an accumulator which receives fluid from a pump. It is desirable 09e8f5149f
