I'm developing on my computer and it works just fine. I publish my application to my development server and try to upload a file using the same uploadUrl that I use when developing the application (localhost:8080/blobstore/upload), but I get an "invalid parameter" error. A: Here is what I found: The problem was that I was trying to use the blobstore API which is available only if the app is running on the local machine. The local application uploaded the files just fine, so it was working just fine. The live application still couldn't upload any files because it was running on a different port (the live app is using a WSGI () python module to run the application on port 80). This is an annoying limitation that I have to live with because the app is stateless. The solution was to avoid using the REST API, but use 570a42141b
