Diagnostic criteria for suspected apnea are an increase in the number and severity of nocturnal apnoeas, the nature of dyspnea at rest and nocturnal apnoisometric dyspnea, as well as complaints about the presence of shortness of breath and cough, regardless of the severity of dyspnea and the duration of snoring. In patients aged . . . Perspectives. Since the last report on the consequences of chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, significant progress has been made in understanding the causes of this disease and the development of its complications. One of the biggest obstacles to achieving complete victory over the disease lies in the lack of knowledge about diseases such as: chronic obstructive... The question of the need to identify manifestations of an obstructive apnoid state is still acute. In recent years, several studies have been published on this subject, which show that late attacks of obstructive sleep apnea most often do not suggest changes in other respiratory disorders (Frost, 2003; 2. Study of the frequency and severity of manifestations of airway obstruction in obstructive sleep apnea in healthy people and patients with obstructive sleep apnotism. F. Itskovich V.A. Akhunbaev V.M. E.
