Long-term outcomes of a real-time polyethylene glycol retention enema (PEGRE) for recurrent/refractory lower-residue gastrointestinal bleeding: a multicenter cohort study in Japan. Patients with lower-residue gastrointestinal bleeding (LGRGB) often require frequent transfusions and occasionally use an indwelling nasogastric tube. We assessed long-term outcomes of PEGRE with respect to the need for blood transfusion and need for rebleeding. A total of 151 patients with recurrent/refractory LGRGB underwent PEGRE in three tertiary medical centers in Japan. PEGRE was performed with 300 mL of polyethylene glycol mixed with 50 mL of Braun an enema at a concentration of 8 mL/g or 20 mL/g, depending on the patient's condition. The median follow-up period was 48 months. Among 151 patients, 108 (72.0%) were cured and 43 (28.0%) were partially treated; there were no clinically significant adverse events. Sixteen patients (10.6%) had recurrent/refractory LGRGB and 15 patients (9.9%) experienced rebleeding. The number of hospital days was significantly shorter in the cured group than in the noncured group (4 vs. 11 days; $p = 0.001$). The group that required ≥ 5 transfusions had a higher rate of rebleeding than that of the group that required fewer transfusions (37.5% vs. 7.9%; $p = 0.004$). The PEGRE procedure is effective in controlling LGRGB and might reduce the need for transfusion in patients with recurrent/refractory LGRGB.

T cell-dependent humoral immunity to epidermal basement membrane zone antigens. The basement membrane zone (BMZ) represents an antigen-processing compartment in the epidermis. The BMZ is located in the transition zone between the epidermis and the dermis, and contains lamina densa components. The most extensively described skin autoantigens belong to this compartment. In this study we examined whether T cell-dependent humoral immunity to the BMZ component I

If you are going to work with your computer, you will definitely encounter problems over time. Working with computers in your everyday life can be very fun and rewarding. If you use your computer for work, you will probably spend a few hours on it every day. If you are like most people, you will probably get these computer problems like these: The file system is not recognized. The computer overheats. The computer has a virus. The computer runs slower than normal. The computer crashes. The computer keeps getting stuck. When the computer begins to act abnormally, do not panic. Instead, it is important to understand the reason for your computer's behavior, and determine a course of action that will help you avoid a similar problem in the future. To determine the root of the problem that is causing your computer to run abnormally, you should turn off your computer and use a Live Disk to scan the hard drive to determine what it is detecting. If a file is recognized by the computer, you should restart the computer by pressing the power button and tapping the on/off button. Once the computer has booted, you should examine the file to make sure it is not damaged. If it is, then you should remove the file and restart your computer again. Once the computer has restarted, you should scan your file system again for any other damaged files and attempt to fix them. If this method does not work, then you may want to take your computer to a computer repair shop and have them determine what is causing the computer problems.
