It does this by extracting information from a Microsoft Excel file that contains the data needed for registration and adding it into the Twitter account signup section. It displays a user-friendly interface that requires no studying before you can use it. It's created to be intuitive and efficient. To register the accounts you first need to insert the XLS file into the application and that is a two click process. MASS Twitter Account Creator also comes with an embedded XLS editor which allows you to view and change any information contained in the Excel file. This way, you can remove certain names or create variations based on an entry. Since the whole registration process requires you to be connected to the Internet, the application enables you to use a proxy server. This comes in handy in case your provider has restricted the use of Twitter in your region. With all the registration data updated and the proxy configured, you just have to click the start button for the application to immediately begin creating the Twitter accounts. The registration process takes place as a normal one, with all the data being verified while it is added. In case a username or email address is taken, you are notified and the application allows you to skip that account and jump to the next. All-in-all, MASS Twitter Account Creator is a well built application, but depends on a lot of elements for it to offer constant successful results.
