Evolution is the driving force behind every system of life. Earth is an amazing place as it offers an abundance of opportunity for evolution to occur, and it has been happening throughout time. Today, we are going to be looking at the world of reptiles and amniotes, which includes lizards, snakes, crocodiles, tortoises, turtles, alligators, and a few others. It can certainly be a confusing and overwhelming to the casual animal enthusiast, but even though it may be a vast world, we are going to take the time to look at the basics of evolution in today's article. The main form of reptile evolution Reptiles are an amazing group of creatures. They are the oldest and most diverse group of animals that are known to exist today. Evolutionary forces have a hard time with reptiles because of their overall size and weight. They are slow-reproducing, and they generally prefer to live in warm climates. Another unique feature that evolution cannot work on is the fact that reptiles do not usually produce the female parts until later in life. It makes sense that the male of the species would be the first one to have its own offspring because it is producing all of the energy for both of them. The reason why reptiles do not usually produce female offspring until they are older is because there is no benefit for them to do so. In the case of crocodiles, the females will usually wait until they are three or four years old before they are mature enough to start producing eggs. The male crocodile would then fertilize the eggs and lay them in water. There are a few exceptions to this rule, but the eggs will usually only be laid for a few days and then the eggs themselves will be eaten. In the end, evolution will naturally select for those females that will mate in the fastest amount of time because the faster they mate, the more offspring they will have. Evolving into different species All of this is well and good, and you can see that evolution makes perfect sense. However, you may have noticed that there are a lot more reptiles than amniotes. This is because there are only eight of them, and each species has completely evolved from the others to become what it is today. In the case of crocodiles, they have evolved from a completely different animal and moved on to adapt in a completely different niche. When there are eight different species of crocodiles, it is a miracle that it is even possible

After fifty games of the 2007-08 NBA season, the Portland Trail Blazers find themselves second in the Pacific Division and tied for fourth in the Western Conference, at 27-26. They are at the midpoint of a season that they've been hoping to reach since opening night. They have the players, especially in terms of depth, to take advantage of this season's opportunities. They are a veteran team that are tenacious on both sides of the floor and the Blazers have the pieces to succeed this season. Last season, the Blazers made the playoffs for the first time since 2003. They've traded away Doug Christie, taken the savings off signing Luke Walton, and added Andre Miller to the rotation. In the offseason, they traded away Nazr Mohammed and Jerome Brown, and were able to pick up Al Jeffery. The Blazers are also adding Minnesota's Ricky Davis to the roster. Davis has been rehabbing from a torn MCL and will report to Portland before the team's next game against the Boston Celtics on January 6. The win-now trade with Minnesota continues with this addition, as it gives the Blazers a second wing to play with Nicolas Batum and Joel Przybilla. Ricky Davis isn't the same player he was two seasons ago, but he has the leadership skills to be a good fit off the bench. He, Batum, and Przybilla will also further learn the system under Terry Stotts. This trade fits with the idea of this year's Trail Blazers. With the money saved from last season's personnel decisions, the team can afford to go into the trade market and bring in depth. But with this trade, this year's team is more about improvement than it is about putting together a title-contending team. The Blazers are looking to build something that can last in the future and that means they are both more experienced and more talented. In the frontcourt, Batum's growth into the versatile stopper he is now has been key to this season's success. Nicolas has always had leadership on this team, especially on the defensive end. The new players in the rotation have opened up the floor for Batum and he has made the most of his opportunities. The Blazers have a nice balance of frontcourt depth as well. With Przybilla, Batum, and Jeffery, they have three starting calibur forwards. This
